Announcing the North South Conference on Intermodal Transport

Catania – a fitting location for the exchange of idea

For over 3000 years, the island of Sicily has been at the centre of the Mediterranean world and a key interchange point between the various cultural traditions that today form Europe. Greek, Phoenician, Roman and Arabian cultures met at this historical crossroads, and later the Holy Roman Emperor was King of both Germany and Sicily. Trade routes to the north, south, east and west flourished for centuries and this continues today with Sicily's role as an important refining and distribution point for petroleum products.

So it is fitting that CISCO and BIC have selected this crossroads of world trade and culture for their anniversary conference, taking inspiration from the past as we meet to exchange new ideas and concepts to promote international trade, today and in the future. A variety of important issues related to world trade will be addressed, with a strong emphasis on intermodal transport using ocean-going containers and on North-South issues in particular. Italian hospitality and internationally renowned experts on intermodal transport and trade will combine to make this an interesting and fruitful two days in April
